Medical Reasons Cited David Bruce to Quit Peace Talks Post

WASHINGTON, July 13 (WP)—David K. E. Bruce, chief U.S. negotiator at the Paris peace talks, has decided to leave the post, the White House confirmed today.

He will be succeeded by William J. Porter, now ambassador to South Korea, administration sources said last night in revealing Mr. Bruce's decision to leave.

However, Presidential Press Secretary Ron Ziegler cautioned today against speculation that Mr. Bruce would be leaving in the near future.

Paris sources said that Mr. Bruce, 72, who previously was ambassador to France, West Germany and Britain, had been advised by his physician some weeks ago to retire but that he stayed on when the Viet Cong's recent seven-point peace plan caught U.S. officials by surprise.

Philip C. Habib, who has been a mainstay of the U.S. delegation from the start of the Paris talks, will return to Paris briefly from Washington before going to Seoul to replace Mr. Porter, sources said.

NBC News reported last night that diplomatic sources also believed the administration was dissatisfied with the working relationship Mr. Bruce had established with the Communists at the talks.

But Mr. Ziegler told newsmen at the Western White House that "the President of course has great confidence in Ambassador Bruce... he feels that Ambassador Bruce has performed his job very well in Paris and knows he will continue to do so."

Mr. Ziegler said that there was no "final decision" on when Mr. Bruce would leave his post and emphasized that the ambassador was stepping aside for "personal reasons. They are not connected in any way with the talks."

In Paris, a member of the U.S. delegation said that in the view of Mr. Bruce's physicians, his retirement "probably could not have come at a better time." It has been known for some time that Mr. Bruce—who came out of retirement for the Paris post—wanted to leave.

"But from a political point of view," the official said, "this could not have happened at a worse time."

He said that the negotiations had finally started to move and that while Mr. Porter was highly regarded, it would take him time to master the ins and outs of the talks.

Mr. Porter, 65, took over the Seoul post in 1967 after serving as deputy ambassador in South Vietnam. Born in Stalybridge, England, he became an American citizen in 1936.

A career Foreign Service officer, Mr. Porter was named consul-general at Algiers in 1961. When Algeria became independent, he became the first U.S. ambassador to that country, and held the post until 1965, when he went to Vietnam.

and thereby creating a kind of electoral college.

A former province chief, Nguyen Van Thieu, told the court his own presidential ambitions were blocked by the election rules.

President Thieu's strongest potential challenger in the October race, former head of state Duong Van (Big) Minh, has repeatedly declared in public that the nomination rules are unconstitutional and he could not run in an election rigged by the administration.

Gen. Minh has not yet formally declared himself a candidate for the election—an election that American officials consider must appear fully democratic to ensure the continuation of vital American aid to the Saigon regime.

The other most likely challenger in the election race, Vice-President Nguyen Cao Ky, who has now openly split with the president, is already concentrating on collecting the signatures of 100 provincial councilors to secure nomination, according to the vice-president's aides.

U.S. Curbs Its Aid to Pakistan But Will Continue To Ship Food

WASHINGTON, July 13 (AP)—The State Department said today that the United States is pushing ahead with humanitarian aid to East Pakistan.

At the same time, U.S. economic assistance to Pakistan for general economic development is in abeyance while specialists weigh the impact of the country's civil strife.

A World Bank group has found that East Pakistan has been so hurt by the rebellion there that economic development assistance could not be helpfully applied for some time to come.

U.S. officials said that while funds for Pakistani economic development are earmarked as such in the U.S. aid budget for the new fiscal year, just what total may actually be programmed for Pakistan has not yet been decided.

They said the World Bank study was received only within the last 24 hours.

State Department press officer Charles Bray, meanwhile, stressed that as "a precautionary measure" 100,000 tons of grain has been authorized for shipment from the U.S. West Coast to Pakistan.

Sen. Edward P. Kennedy, D-Mass., said millions of innocent people will starve in East Pakistan unless emergency measures are taken immediately.

"Aug. 1 is the deadline for many areas," Sen. Kennedy said. He said a report prepared by Agency for International Development (AID) officials criticized the coordination and priorities of the government of Pakistan regarding food needs in East Pakistan, hit by a cyclone and then by civil war.

"It recommends such remedial measures as increased transport facilities, a higher priority for moving food stocks into the interior, and institutional arrangements to carry out a coordinated relief program, specifically in the cyclone area," Sen. Kennedy said in a summary of the AID report.

UNICEF Warning
NEW DELHI, July 13 (Reuters)—The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) believes there is an imminent danger of epidemics of malaria and diphtheria among the 8,700,000 East Pakistani refugees in India.

A report by the organization's office in India also said that severe cases of malnutrition, particularly among children, are on the increase. Arrangements have to be made urgently to distribute supplementary rations of protein-rich food among at least 1,500,000 mothers and children.

The major problem is lack of transport and unless steps are taken to tackle the problem "an extremely grave situation will develop, in a matter of weeks," the report said.

The other major priority for the refugee camps is to improve the water supply and sanitary conditions, which it said "are such as to defy description."

The report did not mention the cholera outbreak which struck in May and June.

But the water and sanitation problems, involving the threat of disease, have replaced it as top priority. The report from John Grin, director of UNICEF's South-Central Asia region, gave the example of the camp at Hasnabad to illustrate the enormity of the task.

A sign there says: "Population 58,000. Latrines 36."

House Bars Contempt Move
On CBS for 'Pentagon' Film

WASHINGTON, July 13 (UPI)—The House today killed a move to cite CBS president Frank Stanton and his television network for contempt of Congress for refusing to give a committee unused film from the controversial documentary "The Selling of the Pentagon."

In a sharp rebuff to chairman Harley O. Staggers, D. Va., members voted 226 to 181 to send the proposed situation back to the Commerce Committee—14 in a dissent to killing it. Rep. Staggers has been the prime mover behind the effort to censure CBS.

The film was critical of military public relations activities, but the information demanded was raw material not telecast in the finished program.

Rep. Staggers insisted the panel's contempt vote was not a challenge to the 1st Amendment's free-speech and free-press guarantees. CBS takes a different view.

"The people," Rep. Staggers said, "must be assured that what they are viewing is true and accurate. If you deny Congress the right to inquire into this, the public's last recourse is gone."

CBS contends the film takes on the same category as a news reporter's notes and thereby is protected.

Groups representing all segments of journalism have expressed concern over the committee's recommendation.

Opponents have cited the historic practice within the Congress of allowing members to revise, edit or alter their remarks before publication in the Congressional Record.

Conviction on the contempt charge carries a maximum penalty of one year in prison and a $1,000 fine.

HANDS UP—Rebels surrender in Rabat after unsuccessful coup against Hassan II.

10 Are Executed In Wake of Plot Against Hassan

RABAT, Morocco, July 13 (Reuters)—Four generals and six other officers were executed by firing squad at a military camp near Rabat today for attempting to overthrow King Hassan II of Morocco.

They were among the ringleaders of Saturday's abortive but bloody coup in which considerably more than 200 persons are now believed to have been killed.

The Moroccan Information Ministry said today that 92 persons were killed and 183 wounded by the mutineers who attacked Hassan's seaside palace at Sikkat, south of here, during a birthday reception for the king. Earlier the death toll had been given as only 28 in the attack, plus 158 mutineers killed and 650 captured there or in Rabat.

The ministry identified 67 of the dead and said 25 others had not yet been identified. Among the identified were another general, Labis Abdelhal, not previously reported dead, and nine Europeans, including Belgian Ambassador Marcel Dupret.

The dead at the palace included a number of servants and guards. Only one was a woman. The reception was an all-male affair, with some 1,200 guests.

The ten men executed today were taken to the military camp here in trucks, handcuffed and wearing military uniforms. They were tied to posts ten yards apart, their insignia were ripped off and they were shot at 12.15 p.m.

According to official sources, the condemned men shouted "Long live the king; Long live Hassan" before the order to fire was given.

Members of the Moroccan Army Navy and Air Force who witnessed the execution spat on the bodies.

Executed Officers Named
Three of the executed generals—Ahmedou Hamou, Khiali Bouzine and Abderrahman Habibi—were governors of military regions, of which Morocco has six. The fourth, Amehach Mustapha, was commander of Moroccan military schools.

The others were identified as five colonels—Chadoui, Hami, Kadir Ben Lebas, Amir and Aboubart—and a Maj. Manouf.

Two other coup leaders were killed in the attack on the palace at Sikkat during a reception for the king's 42d birthday.

They were Gen. Mohammed Medbouh, minister of the royal household, and Col. Ababou, commander of the military training school at Ahermougn.

Hassan is now faced with the task of reorganizing the higher ranks of the army which has now lost eight of 15 generals in three days.

Three loyalist generals died in last weekend's fighting, and the survivors are headed by 80-year-old Field Marshal Mohammed Mezian el-Zahrani. At one time the field marshal was also reported among the dead, but officials said today that he had not even been wounded.

Last night the monarch announced the appointment of Lt. Col. Arzaz el-Hadi as the new commander of the Royal Guard, to replace a loyalist officer killed by the rebels in the fighting at Sikkat.

Plotting Questioned
Two generals are sharing the task of restoring order and discipline in the armed forces. They are Interior Minister Mohammed Oufkir and Gen. Dries Ben Aomar, minister of posts and acting chief of staff.

There was never any question of a trial or a reprieve for the men executed today, Hassan said at a press conference Sunday night that the plotters would have been shot as soon as they were captured if the authorities had not wanted to obtain information from them.

The results of this interrogation have not been made public, and the motive for the attempted coup is still unclear.

3 Die in Lebanon
BEIRUT, July 13 (Reuters)—Three unidentified armed men were killed and three Lebanese soldiers wounded, one seriously, in a clash in south Lebanon tonight.

A Lebanese military spokesman said the three armed men were found by a military patrol in a prohibited area near the border last night and were taken to the nearest military post for investigation.

"One of the three men tried to toss a hand grenade but he was shot by a soldier. The grenade exploded and resulted in the death of the three men. The car was set on fire," the spokesman added.

The commission, including members of all parties, was set up by a parliament vote following the violent deaths in Sicily of nine persons in 1963, including seven policemen.

The connections between the Mafia and politics were mentioned only in passing in today's report. The commission said it was completing a separate report on the political aspects.

All on the list had been Mafia suspects and some are dead. The commission, however, said it was preparing reports on persons who have never been described as Mafia by the magistracy but who are no less dangerous to society for this.

Decision Seen Aiding Thieu Saigon High Court Upholds Restrictive Election Rules

SAIGON, July 13 (Reuters)—A South Vietnamese supreme court tonight upheld as constitutional a controversial election law nominating candidates for the July 15 presidential election.

The nine-man court, by a 7-2 decision, rejected appeals by 40 deputies and 100 provincial councilors who signed the nomination papers.

The court ruled that the nomination rules are unconstitutional and he could not run in an election rigged by the administration.

Gen. Minh has not yet formally declared himself a candidate for the election—an election that American officials consider must appear fully democratic to ensure the continuation of vital American aid to the Saigon regime.

Pentagon Documents Case

U.S. Seeks to Indict 3 Newspapers

By Ken W. Clawson

WASHINGTON, July 13 (WP)—A federal grand jury in Boston is investigating possible criminal charges against The New York Times, The Washington Post and the Boston Globe in connection with the publication of secret Pentagon documents on the Vietnam war.

Ned Echeban, a Times reporter credited with breaking the story about the U.S. decision-making process against Vietnam, and his wife, Susan, a magazine writer and author, were also named in the government's case before the grand jury last week in Boston. The Post has learned.

Government officials had hinted at the possibility of empanelling a grand jury to seek criminal charges against those who conveyed and accepted the top secret Pentagon Papers along with Daniel Ellsberg, who has admitted leaking the papers to the press. He has been charged with unauthorized possession of classified documents.

Sources said last night that the government in utmost secrecy started the federal jury's criminal investigation by giving evidence to the jury, which has been sitting in Boston on other matters since early April.

Two persons employed by different printing firms in the greater Boston area testified before the grand jury last week. Sources said the printers apparently were involved in copying parts of the 47-volume Pentagon study that ultimately ended up in the possession of The Times.

The same sources said that Mr. Ellsberg was not involved in early testimony and that the government seemed to be concentrating initially on how the documents were duplicated and how they came into possession of The Times.

Two unidentified lawyers from the Justice Department's Internal Security Division and Richard E. Bachman, an assistant U.S. attorney in Boston, reportedly stressed to the grand jury that the criminal proceedings do not conflict with the Supreme Court decision permitting the newspapers to publish the contents of the documents.

Secrecy of the proceedings was stressed, with U.S. Attorney Herbert F. Travers Jr. discarding the usual policy of disclosing with-

Italian Parliament Panel Lists, Assails Mafiosi

7-Year Investigation Names 13; Further Disclosures Promised

ROME, July 13 (AP)—A parliamentary commission which has been investigating the underworld for seven years today listed Italy's top Mafia leaders and said they were "bloody criminals, killers, drug dealers, persons capable of any atrocity."

In a 300-page report, the commission said the Sicilian Mafia has grown out of the countryside into the cities after the pattern of the American underworld and has become a part of international gangsterism.

If Mafia men seldom have been convicted in court, the report said, it is because they enjoyed "powerful and authoritative protection from police up to the central government."

The report said Premier Emilio Colombo's Christian Democrats were among the parties which bartered political protection for the Mafia's electoral support.

Obituaries: Edgar Eisenhower, 82; President's Brother

WASHINGTON, July 13 (WP).—Edgar N. Eisenhower, 82, brother of the late President Dwight D. Eisenhower, died last night in Tacoma, Wash., nine days after being hospitalized for arteriosclerosis that a doctor said caused severe brain damage.

Edgar Eisenhower once publicly accused his brother of breaking a campaign promise. "I can't for the life of me understand what persuaded Dwight to go for that big budget this year. All of his campaign speeches and promises were for decreased government spending."

Edgar's been criticizing me since I was 5 years old," the President replied, when told about his brother's remarks.

President Eisenhower's older brother was a tax lawyer who was once described by his political ally, U.S. Sen. Barry Goldwater, as "a wonderful man who is even rightwing of me."

The second-oldest of seven sons, Mr. Eisenhower was the first in the family to be nicknamed "Ike."

"When Dwight (a year younger) came along to school, the boys began calling me 'Big Ike' and him 'Little Ike,'" Mr. Eisenhower reminisced.

Born in Hope, Kan., he graduated from high school in Abilene. His brother Dwight helped finance his first year in college while awaiting appointment to the U.S. Military Academy. In 1914, Mr. Eisenhower graduated from law school at the University of Michigan.

He moved to Tacoma, Wash., the same year and established the law practice he conducted there for more than 50 years. While his brother was President, Mr. Eisenhower came to Washington several times to attend White House social events.

Against Administration Mr. Eisenhower expressed dissatisfaction with government policies several times during his brother's administration, speaking out against Social Security, high taxes and the decision to send federal troops to enforce desegregation of the schools in Little Rock, Ark.

In 1959, Mr. Eisenhower became a trustee of Americans for Constitutional Action, which described itself as dedicated to opposing the government's "spend-thrift and inflationary policies."

Five years later Mr. Eisenhower served as honorary chairman of the Washington State Goldwater for President Committee.

Of the seven Eisenhower brothers, only Milton, interim president of Johns Hopkins University and head of the Presidential Commission on Violence, survives.

Adm. Joseph Clark NEW YORK, July 13 (AP).—Adm. Joseph James (Jocko) Clark, 70, veteran U.S. Navy combat commander known as the "Patron of the Pacific" for his aggressiveness against Japanese units in World War II, died here today.

A family spokesman said Adm. Clark, who saw duty in three wars and received dozens of decorations, had cancer and died in a hospital.

Adm. Clark served twice as asstant chief of U.S. naval operations in Washington, but it was his daring in battle that distinguished his 40-year career as a naval officer.

In the two years before his retirement in 1963, he served as commander of the Seventh Fleet, operating against forces in North Korea, and received nine medals.

Adm. Clark earlier was cited for "extraordinary heroism" in World War II when he commanded the flagship USS Hornet in a task-force assault against a Japanese convoy near the Bonin Islands in the Pacific.

In one engagement in World War II Adm. Clark took a calculated risk as planes were returning at night from an attack on the Japanese fleet in the Philippine Sea.

Because most of the pilots were inexperienced at night landing, Adm. Clark ordered the ships' lights turned on, despite warnings that there were enemy submarines in the area.

"Damn the submarines," he said. "Turn on the lights."

Mrs. Marian McVitty UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., July 13 (NYT).—Mrs. Marion Hazard McVitty, 60, a well known personality here as an official observer for the World Federalists, died of cancer Sunday at New York's St. Vincent's Hospital.

Mrs. McVitty was widely known among the 250 private organizations that maintain U.N. observers who follow the organization's meetings and frequently contribute ideas or reports to delegations.

Mrs. McVitty's special field of interest was disarmament. She published a book, "Preface to Disarmament," in 1969 and wrote many articles on the subject. She also testified in Washington at congressional hearings. She was the editor of the Independent Observer, a newsletter analyzing events at the U.N.

Secretary-General U Thant praised her contributions in a letter last year and spoke of her

"devotion and dedication to the principles of the United Nations."

J. W. Campbell Jr. MOUNTAINSIDE, N.J., July 13 (AP).—John Wood Campbell Jr., 61, science-fiction writer and editor of a science-fiction magazine for the last 34 years, died Sunday at his home.

Mr. Campbell had edited "Analog, Science Fact and Fiction," since 1937.

He wrote a novel in 1938, "Who Goes There," which was made into the movie "The Thing From Outer Space."

Mr. Campbell was also known as a scientific prophet, credited with making many accurate predictions in the columns of his magazine. In 1939 he predicted that atomic energy would be released from uranium.

Clifford Goldsmith TUCSON, Ariz., July 13 (AP).—Clifford Goldsmith, 72, creator of one of American radio's longest running programs, "The Aldrich Family," died at a hospital here Sunday.

"The Aldrich Family," which was first carried on radio in 1938, ran until 1954. It was also televised in the early 1950s. Mr. Goldsmith wrote the first season's script for the TV program. Later, he worked with other writers.

Maj. Gen. Ivan R. Kirpal MOSCOW, July 13 (UPI).—Maj. Gen. Ivan R. Kirpal, 56, head of the political department of the general staff and of anti-aircraft defense troops, has died, the army newspaper, Krasnaya Zvezda, said today.

Gen. Keith McCutcheon WASHINGTON, July 13 (AP).—Retired U.S. Marine Gen. Keith B. McCutcheon, 58, died of cancer today at Bethesda Naval Hospital, Marine officials said.

Gen. McCutcheon was commander of all Marine forces in Vietnam until last December. He was chosen to become commander of the Marine Corps but became ill before he could take over that post.

Corona Indicted in 25 Killings

YUBA CITY, Calif., July 13 (UPI).—A 25-count first-degree murder indictment was returned last night against Juan V. Corona, suspected slayer of transient farm workers.

Mr. Corona, 37, a farm-labor contractor, was arrested after 25 bodies of field workers were exhumed during late May and early June along the Feather River and surrounding orchards north of Yuba City.

Grand jury members were ordered not to discuss the case with anyone by Sutter County Superior Court Judge John G. Hauck.

Ceausescu Orders a Purge Of Non-Communist Culture

VIENNA, July 13 (UPI).—Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu ordered his Communist party today to take direct charge of the nation's culture and to eliminate everything that does not serve "Communist education."

Mr. Ceausescu, in a speech to party activists, filled in details on a party decree last week which ordered a major ideological crackdown—one of the most stringent in Communist nations in recent years.

The campaign came at a time when most East European nations are easing up on cultural controls. Diplomats in Romania said Mr. Ceausescu, who is also party first secretary, was obviously unhappy with the Romanians' commitment to Communism and with the creeping increase of Western influence in Romanian television, movies, books and life styles.

'Arts Must Serve'

To counteract this, Mr. Ceausescu said, "it is necessary to strengthen the party leadership and guidance of the whole cultural-artistic life of this country. There must be a single concept [and] ideology—the revolutionary ideology and concept of the working class."

Specifically, Communist education, Communist education of party leaders to personally approve any imported movie and any play staged in Romania. The party, he said, "must take over entirely... the whole educational activity."

"The press," he said, "is an instrument of the party and must serve to disseminate the party policy in all domains of activity... We cannot admit radio and television programs which by their content do not actively contribute to the Communist, patriotic, revolutionary education of the youth of the people."

Mr. Ceausescu said the government "has the right to interfere in literature and in the fine arts, also in music, to admit only what it considers to harmonize with Socialism."

Mr. Ceausescu said "freedom of creation" must give way before this right.

"We do not understand and cannot accept any kind of freedom for the productions inspired by concepts alien to the ideology of the working class," he said.

He admitted that some party members feared that the crackdown meant "a reversion to the past," but said, "I don't know what they mean."

Despite its relatively independent foreign policy, Romania, domestically, has long been one of the most rigid East European states, with the party in firm control and with little freedom of artistic creation. Visions to Romania have noted a widespread disillusionment with Communism among the people, an opposition to the party bureaucracy and a boredom with party propaganda.

Apollo-15 Rocket Passes Tests in Key Rehearsal

CAPE KENNEDY, July 13 (UPI).—The Apollo-15 rocket, loaded with one million gallons of propellant, passed a critical countdown rehearsal today for the launch to the moon, in 15 days.

The Saturn-5 rocket, venting oxygen vapor as it would on launch day, simulated a blastoff up to the moment just short of the engine ignition command.

Apollo-15 astronauts David R. Scott, Alfred M. Worden and James R. Irwin skipped the exercise today because of the headache involved with a fully fueled Saturn. They will run through their part of the countdown tomorrow, when the rocket is drained.

The final hours of the test went without a hitch. All three stages of the Saturn were loaded with kerosene, liquid oxygen and liquid hydrogen.

"We've had a very good countdown," reported a spokesman.

Prisoners of History?

A British soldier was killed in Belfast while Orangemen in Northern Ireland marched to celebrate the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne—fought 281 years ago, and there were stonings and bus hijackings elsewhere in Ulster in memory of the defeat of King James II by William of Orange. Wracked by civil strife that follows sectarian lines, it might well be claimed that Ulster is the prisoner of history, doomed to perpetuate a struggle that long ago lost any real relevance to today's world.

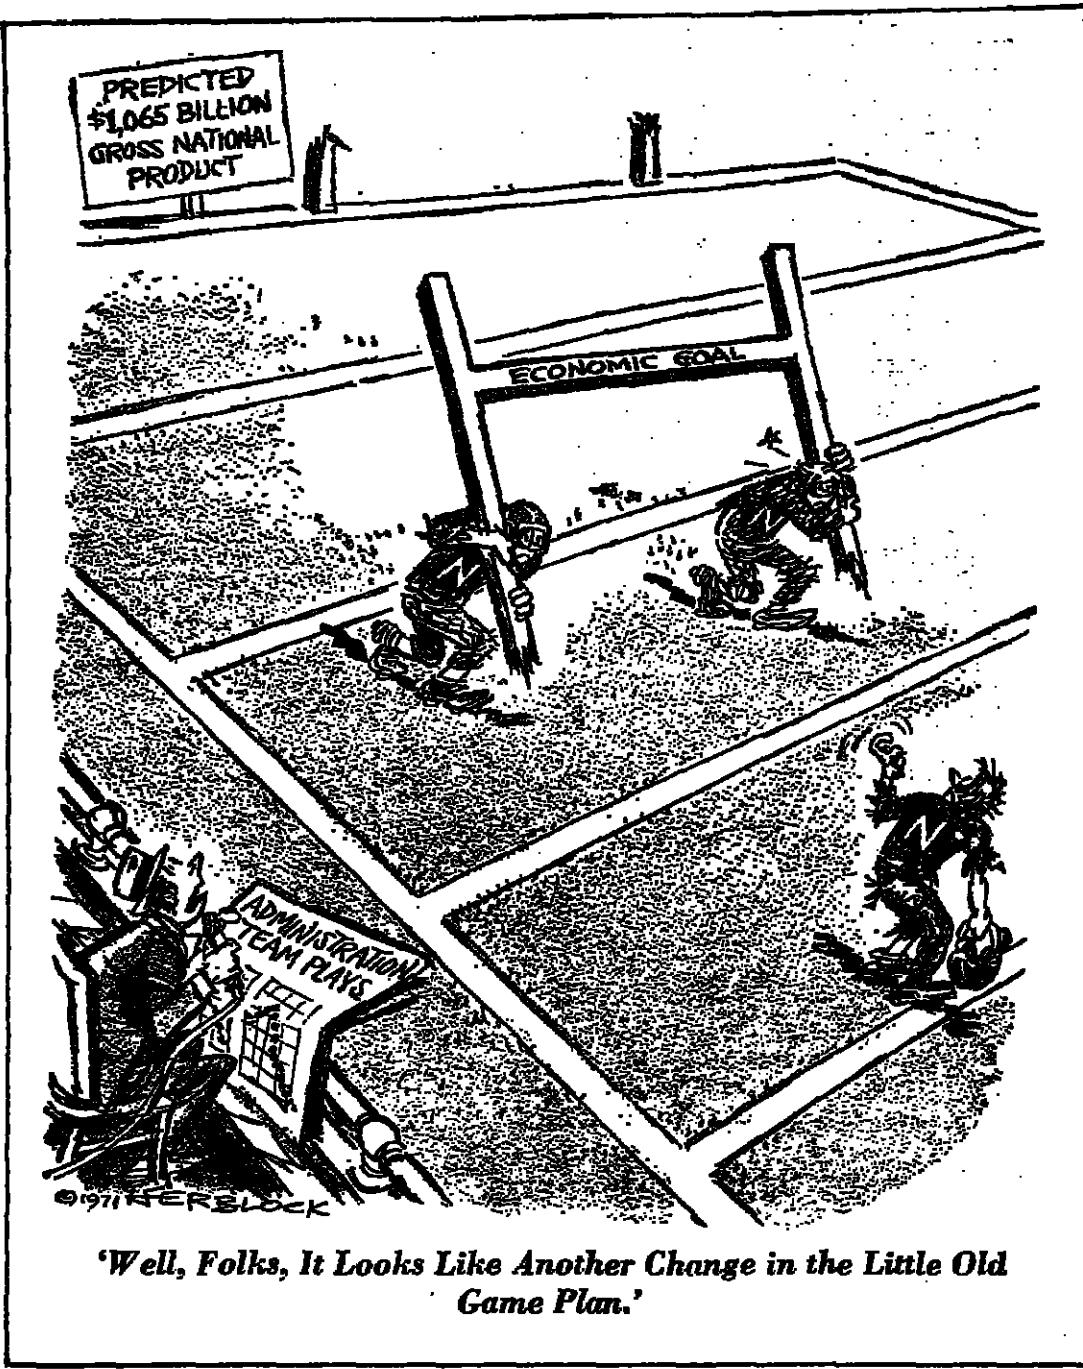

But it is not history that sets Irishman against Irishman, and both against Scot and English—or, certainly, not history alone. Boyne Water was a tangled fight, from any nationalist standpoint: Dutch William had relatively few soldiers from the British Isles in a polyglot army that included Swiss and Finns, as well as many of his own countrymen; the disciplined and trained core of James's force was French. Even the date of the battle is obscured by the subsequent change in the calendar from the old style to new. And William's decisive victory over the last Stuart to rule Britain came a year later, when the Dutch Van Ginkel defeated the French Marquis de Saint-Ruth at Aughrim.

Nevertheless, the Battle of the Boyne became the great symbol of the Irish Protestants with the formation of the Orange Order more than a century after the affray. Its influence spread beyond Britain, and there was rioting between Orangemen and Irish Catholics in New York on the 12th of July; it is still celebrated in Toronto, and one of the most divisive aspects of Louis Riel's rebellions in Canada was that they pitted Catholic French-Indians against the country's Protestants by the killing of an Orangeman.

But in the United States and Canada these divisions are no longer significant. All New Yorkers become a kind of honorary Irish on St. Patrick's Day, and in Canada it is French-speaking nationalism rather than religious affiliation that causes friction. And in Ulster itself it is rather the domination of a cultural and economic group—one which is threatened both by a minority within Northern Ireland and by the claims of the South to embrace the whole island, that is at issue, rather than theology.

True, the old words, the old songs, and the old bitternesses of religious division exacerbate and emphasize the conflict. And to the extent that history helped shape the contending forces, history drives on mobs and guides the aim of snipers and rock-throwers. But to submit, mindlessly, to history is no less a submission than the acceptance of any other tyranny. Ireland must rise above a tragic past, or it is doomed to a tragic future. The hard, practical problems of the present, the adjustment of economic equities and the establishment of cross-cultural ties are difficult enough without raising ghosts from Boyne Water.

The Price of Democracy

By C. P. Snow

LONDON.—From across the Atlantic, the first thing that hits one about the Pentagon disclosures is that nothing like them could have happened here. Our legal processes would have strangled them before birth. Let me hasten to say that I'm not suggesting that this is a point to us. All systems of your kind or ours—what we call parliamentary democracies—have some method of extracting information out of the executive and keeping it in check. Our method is by making the executive directly responsible to Parliament. Yours is in the last resort the press.

Each of these methods has its disadvantages. I don't think that in our system so many hidden decisions behind the Vietnam policy could have remained so hidden for so many years; we shouldn't have known the whole truth, but we should have known part of it. On the other hand, our method can suppress the whole truth almost forever. For instance, there was much foolishness and wickedness behind the Suez adventure, as much as behind Vietnam, and also perpetrated by decent, honorable and intelligent men. But, though we can guess, we shan't really know what went on until a lot of us are dead.

Price of Honesty

On balance, your method probably has the greater virtues. It certainly puts a major premium on honesty. For that you pay a price. The chief price, it seems from over here, is a heavy strain upon society. It will need a lot of self-control and stoicism for people to keep their heads; and for Americans to keep their heads is desperately important for us all. I was, I confess, a little surprised that the news came as so traumatic a shock. For anyone who has ever been within touching distance of secret decisions, or who has even read the history of the last war, it couldn't have been. In the last war we solemnly denounced the Germans for bombing civilian targets, shouting out loud that this was an unthinkable outrage: so unthinkable that we had been determined to do it, on the largest scale in our history, if a single city were bombed. Why did we build heavy bombers? (which, incidentally, neither the Germans nor the Russians did).

Self-Deception

I haven't had the chance to read all the documents, but what is surprising to me is not the language or deception (that is an occupational disease of war), but the extent of self-deception among, as I said before, decent, honorable and intelligent men. Somehow two pressures, converging together, seem to have driven out realism. One was the ideological realism, which meant that the abstract called "Communism" in a negative sense took charge; and the other was the intoxication of technological power. The latter was, and is, most deluding. This isn't hindsight: I said it in America in the early sixties and there, because I hadn't anything more useful to say, kept quiet. Even if one puts aside moral or world political sense, that Vietnam war was never on.

Surely the essential thing now, though, is for Americans to keep their heads. Gull, recriminations, will get us all nowhere. The lessons can be assimilated. American society is much tougher, and fundamentally sturdier, than some of my American friends seem to think. The whole world will look brighter when the most generous side of America finds its cause. There is a cause right in front of us. Over-population, and all it will bring, is flooding on us everyday. Unless that is coped with, all these troubles of 1971 will seem like a remote footnote to a comparatively placid and luxurious age.

Lord Snow, author of "The Two Cultures" and "Corridors of Power," is a close student of contemporary civilization. He wrote this article for The New York Times.

What 'All the People' Want

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS.—Communist strategy in this final phase of the Indochina war seems postulated on proving Abraham Lincoln was wrong and that it is indeed possible to fool all the American people all the time. Hanoi has reason to believe it may well demonstrate this cynical theorem's accuracy.

Emphasis of the conflict has shifted from the battlefields of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia to Paris where, although formal peace talks remain stalemated, cubic yards of propaganda are being released. After a year's absence, Le Duc Tho, number five in the North Vietnamese pecking order, returned here to join Madame Binh, the Viet Cong negotiator, in mounting a diplomatic offensive.

It doesn't require second sight to see that Hanoi is convinced a growing majority of Americans opposes any Nixon policy that isn't tantamount to cut and run from Indochina and that the respect and esteem for the U.S. government on war policy flicker close to zero.

Communist officials have therefore eagerly made themselves available to the foreign press to explain that if only the United States will be reasonable, a settlement can swiftly be arranged on the basis of an announced fixed date for an American military withdrawal under promised safeguards and a release of prisoners (from Vietnam; Laos and Cambodia haven't yet been mentioned).

Yes, But

It is asserted that no conditions are attached, that if only President Thieu will be replaced in Saigon as president, North and South Vietnam can arrange a settlement between them as separate neutral partners. Le Duc Tho went so far as to tell a French magazine this week that Hanoi will eschew all alliances and refuse military bases to any foreign countries (such as China or Russia).

This seems heartening. It promises a negotiable way out of an unpopular war—until one carefully rereads the very first point of the new negotiating position outlined by Madame Binh on July 1. This includes the following categorical demands:

"The U.S. government must put an end to its war of aggression in Vietnam, the policy of 'Vietnamization' of the war, withdrawal from South Vietnam all troops, military personnel, weapons and war materials of the United States and of other foreign countries in the U.S. camp, and dismantle all U.S. bases in South Vietnam, without posing any condition whatsoever (my italics).

The International Herald Tribune welcomes letters from readers. Short letters have a better chance of being published. All letters are subject to condensation for space reasons. Anonymous letters will not be considered for publication. Writers may request that their letters be signed only with initials, but preference will be given to those fully signed and bearing the writer's complete address.

Never before has the United States appeared so militarily helpless. In World War I 500,000 American men were drafted as draft dodgers. That figure is starting but this time, as I understand, the whole U.S.A. wants to dodge an even larger unpopular draft, leaving us helpless even to negotiate.

The Democratic Outlook

The growing number of would-be Democratic presidential candidates is a testament to the party's confidence that it can defeat President Nixon for re-election. The unusual variety of these candidates in experience, style and convictions is a testament to the party's traditional diversity. The active or actively interested candidates range from that sober, cautious, little-known pillar of the congressional establishment, Rep. Wilbur Mills of Arkansas, to that implausible adventurer, Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles. There are Sen. William Proxmire of Wisconsin, who is best known for killing the SST and wanting to cut the Pentagon budget, and Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington, who fought to save the SST and wants to increase the Pentagon budget.

Rep. William Anderson of Tennessee, a retired Navy captain best known for championing the Berrigan brothers, is a remotely possible candidate for the support of the Democrats who rank peace as the overriding issue. He would be yoking with the much better known Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota, the only declared candidate; with former Attorney General Ramsey Clark, with Sen. Harold Hughes of Iowa, who nominated former Sen. Eugene McCarthy at the 1968 convention, and possibly with Mr. McCarthy himself unless the latter decides to found his own party.

Both members of the narrowly unsuccessful Democratic ticket last time—Sen. Hubert Humphrey and Sen. Edmund Muskie—would like to run again for the top spot, while Sen. Edward Kennedy, on behalf of the party's favorite dynasty, would not turn it down.

And then still to be mentioned are Sen. Birch Bayh and Sen. Fred Harris.

Even the ranks of the party do not exhaust the list of potential candidates. There are Democrats who would like their party to nominate an independent Republican such as Mayor John V. Lindsay of New York who, despite any difficulties he may be having at city hall, has national political appeal and whose candidacy would have a large if incalculable effect on the Democratic contest.

Out of this welter of candidates it is possible to discern the big four—Sens. Muskie, McGovern, Kennedy and Humphrey. In every opinion poll since the 1968 election, Mr. Muskie has run either first or second as the choice of rank-and-file Democrats. More significant, however, is the fact that he runs strongest in those voting groups where his party is weakest and needs to build strength—the suburbs, the college-educated, the independents. In contrast, Sen. Kennedy does well because of his appeal to the party's traditional supporters—the cities, the blacks, the manual workers.

Sen. Muskie's strengths are his dignified calmness, his cool judgment under fire, his tolerance and openness to argument. No national leader since Franklin Roosevelt has been better than Mr. Muskie in delivering a conventional "fireside chat." These same qualities appeal to party leaders looking for a candidate who can harmonize their differences. But to many young voters and to those who believe the times call for radical change, Sen. Muskie appears a little too cautious. He evokes respect but not enthusiasm.

This mild dissatisfaction with the front-runner provides Sen. McGovern with his opportunity. He lags far back in the private estimates of local politicians, but if he should capture the imagination of ordinary voters in the primaries, he could overturn all the orthodox calculations. As a candidate thus far, Mr. McGovern has shown the weaknesses of his strengths. That is, he was an early and consistent critic of the war; he boldly champions a reduction in military spending and a new order of national priorities. For many who share his convictions, that record establishes his moral superiority. But many others fear his views have too sharp a cutting edge and he would antagonize as many elements as he won over.

Sen. Humphrey, ebullient, energetic, voluble, optimistic and friendly, looks as if he is back in his natural home now that he has returned to the Senate. There are those in his party who believe that he ought to be content to stay in the Senate. His liberal reputation was badly damaged by his service as Vice-President in the Johnson administration. It is doubtful if he could stir the enthusiasm and active support of many independents and younger voters. Yet Mr. Humphrey has a long and constructive record of public service and is an indefatigable campaigner; and in view of Mr. Nixon's return from the political graveyard, no major politician can ever again be said to have been damaged irreparably.

What is true for Mr. Humphrey is true in equal measure for Sen. Kennedy. The tragedy of Chappaquiddick was a kind of misfortune different from Mr. Humphrey's public defense of a war about which he had private doubts. But both call into question the quality of a man's judgment. On that occasion, Sen. Kennedy did not demonstrate the candor and clarity of judgment which the public has a right to expect in a high public official.

Time, the great healer, can soften the past and impose a statute of limitation with regard to regrettable episodes, as it has in the case of certain events in President Nixon's earlier career. But the memory of Chappaquiddick has not yet faded. For that reason if for no other, Mr. Kennedy would do well to avoid seeking the presidency next year.

Seventy-Five Years Ago

NEW YORK—Mr. William Jennings Bryan has assumed the leadership of his campaign for the present. He is an enthusiast—raw but gifted. He believed that the star of destiny is over him and is positive of his ability to sweep the country with his marvellous gift of speech just as he swept the Democratic Convention. The Democratic party however, is split, some favoring gold and Mr. McKinley.

CHICAGO—"Gingham gowns for girls" may become the mandate in business offices in Chicago if the present extreme styles continue, some of the employment agencies in the city announced. At any rate, a great wave in reform and more restrictive dress for the girls seems to be demanded, but the girls themselves are not cooperating. They still come to work in knee-length skirts and silk stockings, etc.

Still Dogging It

Congratulations on your article on the English attitude toward bringing dogs into their tight little island. I have sent your article on to the Prime Minister, with a reminder that the British attitude is a bit staid, and suggesting that, come the millennium upon Common Market entry, perhaps they could relax a bit.

One must not overlook the built-in self-interest of the veterinarians, and perhaps the British government could phase out the kennel program by paying them for NOT keeping dogs in confinement! That would save the conscience of the veterinarians and provide at the same time a humane and human solution of the problem of dogs and their owners.

Press and Policy

I refer to the Pentagon-N.Y. Times case. There are disturbing and unresolved questions still to be faced up to here, not the least of which is whether the press itself is prepared to come forward with some kind of voluntary machinery designed to avoid repetition of such damaging confrontations between the two fundamental opposites of a free society, freedom of the press and legitimate national security interests.

I propose a press-sponsored initiative calling for a blue-ribbon panel of five distinguished representatives, one from each of the following: government, press, Congress, judiciary and the public. Sworn to silence, panel members would be called together within 48 hours of a newspaper's receipt of information from government files clearly stamped "Secret" or higher. They would decide, by majority vote, on one issue, viz, is the classified information which the particular newspaper desires to publish so vital to legitimate national security interests that the First Amendment guarantee must not be invoked by the newspaper in question. A ruling would have to be given within 48 hours, failing which the material could be published.

Accent is placed on the need for voluntary establishment by the press of such a panel to preclude cries of efforts by the government, at unconstitutional censorship.

Liberal's Defense

Since my patriotic pride seems now to have survived "On Independence Day in the United States" (Herald, July 5), may I please offer a liberal's defense in the language of a scholar in the field?

Twenty years ago Eric Goldman wrote a history of liberal and progressive movements in the United States. Would not most liberals today still lay claim to the premise that: "For almost a century the modern American reformer has been the gaffly and the conscience, to a large extent the heart and the mind of the only nation in man's history which has dared to live by the credo that any individual's rendezvous with his destiny is a rendezvous with a better tomorrow."

Youth Fares

Congratulations to editorial cartoonist Herblock for so aptly depicting pictorially (Herald, July 8) the aggravating illogic of the airlines' "youth fare" ridiculousness. But probably we 29-pluses should sincerely wish the scheduled airlines great success in segregating and packing all the "hippie-kiddies" (up to 30) on their own, so that we "liberals" can enjoy the greater comfort, more accessible sanitary facilities, free drinks and adult companions on the non-skeds' 70's & DC-8s, at comparable or even lower prices!

LISBON: The Gulbenkian Legacy of 1,300 Art Objects

By Rona Dobson

LISBON (HT)—Calouste Gulbenkian's prodigious legacy—his collection—willed to Portugal in his death in 1955 first left Lisbon breathless, then touched by a burst of activity and a winking spree.

Exhibits are superlatively lit with special glass filters diffusing light and reducing damaging rays. All the glass came from Germany, the security system from Switzerland, architectural advice from Italy and France, specialist help for the foundation's auditorium from Britain.

BRIDGE — By Alan Truscott

Although the Precision Club International touring team won its exhibition match against the Philippines by 105 international match points, the result was entirely satisfactory to a group of local women players who faced the visitors, and started brilliantly by taking a 27-point lead after five deals. This lead was reduced to 6 points after 11 deals.

As the visitors then gained 116 points against three different open teams, consisting almost entirely of men, a powerful blow was struck for women's bridge liberation in the Philippines.

Giorgio Belladonna turned the tide for the visitors in the early stages of the match by landing a game contract that the commentators expected to fail. He opened the South hand shown in the diagram with one diamond, and reversed with two hearts when Benito Garozzo responded one spade.

Garozzo, never a backward bidder, jumped to three spades with the North hand, and tried four hearts after his partner's three no-trump.

Looking at the four hands, it would seem that ten tricks are impossible to make, but Belladonna had his first break when West led a club, which was taken by the jack in the closed hand. He entered dummy with a spade lead to the king, and led the singleton diamond ten.

East went up with the ace, a

TOYS THAT DON'T CARE
By Edward M. Swartz. Gambit, 289 pp. Illustrated $4.95
Reviewed by Myra MacPherson

THIS book, with its frightening array of dangerous weapons masquerading as toys, makes every American home seem like a potential booby-trapped mine field for children.

Take a look around yours. The etch-a-sketch read with a thin cover that breaks into knife-like shards; toys with tiny parts to swallow easily disassembled by 3-year-olds; "play" ovens capable of frying little fingers (also the "thingmaker" with temperatures up to 500). Darts capable of blinding one when the protective tips are removed; sharp prongs inside quickly broken baby rattles; flammable tunnels; blankets and stuffing of toys that blaze in seconds; unsafe swings and trampolines.

Got any crazy loony straws on the kitchen counter? They are those looped monstrosities the kids begged you to buy and TV ads convinced you would get the precious ones to drink their milk. They are pronounced, says Edward Swartz, but the loops are nice-sounding and become nice breeding grounds for germs. (Our crazy straws went into the trash after they began to smell faintly.)

Swartz, who is a lawyer, states that toys cause the serious injury, horrible maiming and disfigurement and death of some 700,000 children annually. Many of the toys cited are those exposed in various government hearings. However, he lists many additional ones and this is a valuable compendium of what not to buy, as well as an angry expose of how little the government, the toy manufacturers or anyone else is doing to make toys safe.

Swartz also emphasizes a unique area—the toy that causes psychological harm. No, don't put him down as a nervous nelly. For example, would you really want your child, in this era of teen-age drug users, to get used to a toy hypodermic, to get used to a slogan "I'll try anything"? Or a gruesome little number called "Pieces of Body" ("trade 'em, collect 'em, transplant 'em")? The cover shows blood dripping from various dissected portions of the body. One candy cigarette packet, cover made in Taiwan, shows a man burning a woman's back with his cigarette. And then there is the "Motorized Crashmobile, the Exploding Car." All put out by the Marquette de Sade Toy Company, no doubt.

Swartz details the woefully inadequate rules and regulations for toy companies and exposes some of the myths anxious parents have fallen back on in picking toys. The "educational" toy that does very little educating, for example. Did you know that the "first requisite for both the Good Housekeeping and Parents' Magazine seals (of approval)," according to Swartz, "is the purchase of advertising space in the respective magazines, for both those seals are only awarded to advertisers?"

Another gimmick is the private testing agencies whose paid-for endorsements count as if they come from disinterested organizations. Swartz writes, "There is very little correlation between this confidence-inducing material and toy safety." He continues, "The toy maker who gets an unfavorable report from one laboratory may simply ship the toy off to a second tester and so on until he finds one that will approve. The public will never hear of reports of those agencies reluctant to concur."

Nor is there often much concern for the parent of a child who is maimed or killed through an accident with a toy. Swartz describes the murky legal niceties.

For example, a mother bought a plastic top at a supermarket and took it home in her grocery bag. Almost immediately after her daughter began to play with the top exploded, cutting her eye and putting out her eye, Swartz writes.

When the family sued, the defendants were able to successfully argue that they were not fully of responsibility because there was no evidence that the toy when first used was in any same condition as when bought.

One of the most devastating tragic examples is a picture of a young girl, her face and hands an ugly, misshapen mass of only burned but melted napalm-like substance. Swartz points out that it contained synthetic fibrill and at the time it was manufactured other synthetic fibers existed that were naturally flame resistant and durable. He says the Federal Fair Packaging Act must be far more effective and that "black nightgowns and children's nightgowns can easily be purchased which may burst into flame upon exposure to a source of ignition."

He stresses that both Great Britain and West Germany would ban as unsafe and dangerous many of the toys sold freely in the United States. He points out that these countries take a more civilized approach to toy regulations that makes America look both callous and barbaric.

Swartz calls upon every parent to buy only the safe toys. He examines, protesting and pointing the alarm about toys. Some of the general rules and suggestions include not buying on impulse, believing advertising claims, buying toys that use hazardous materials, buying toys that are flammable and shatterproof, buying toys that use hazardous materials, buying toys that are flammable and shatterproof, buying toys that use hazardous materials, buying toys that are flammable and shatterproof.

The main reason many of us have is simple—there just are that many good toys out there that are imaginative, homemade and are better. (That suggests brought a nervous gulp from a mother, who is outfitted with thumbs and little imagination the artsy-crafty field.)

No, the best solution is to buy. Read the book and become an aware, fighting parent! Next time you hit the toy department.

No-Holds-Barred Journalism

By Waverley Root

PARIS (IET)—In 1971, one English-language daily is published in Paris—the one you are reading now. In 1927, when I started my newspaper career here, there were four: The New York Herald, a subsidiary of Gordon Bennett's New York Paper; the Chicago Tribune, a subsidiary of Colonel Robert Rutherford McCormick's Chicago paper; The Paris Times, a subsidiary of nobody, whose financing was supplied by an expatriate millionaire who could afford to lose money in those painful days before the 1929 Stock Exchange crash; and The Continental Daily Mail, which tried to compete with the others for American readers even to the extent of reporting the World Series—with some success, indeed, for accounts of American baseball games written by Britishers laboring under the delusion that baseball was a backwoods form of cricket packed a laugh a line.

Journalistic competition in those days was knock-down-and-drag-out, no holds barred. It occurred chiefly between The Herald and The Tribune, for The Paris Times, with only local resources and no home paper to feed it cables, was pretty much outwitted. It is possible that I remember particularly the successfully landed blows many of them, I fear, beneath the belt of The Tribune, for that was the side I was on, as news editor of that paper. But it seems likely that The Tribune really did come more often, for it was less inhibited by scruples than The Herald, which, as the elder paper, was more decorous. We not only occasionally surprised The Herald, we even shocked it. There was one night when Larry Hills, then publisher of The Herald, burst into the city room at closing time, waving above his head a copy of The Tribune, fresh from the press. His face was livid. "They're crazy at The Tribune," he cried, "start, starting mad! They've put the word 'border' in a headline." In these permissive days, that would not ruffle a hair of your grandmothers, but in those days it was hot stuff, and we had to argue with the printers to get them to set it up.

Characters

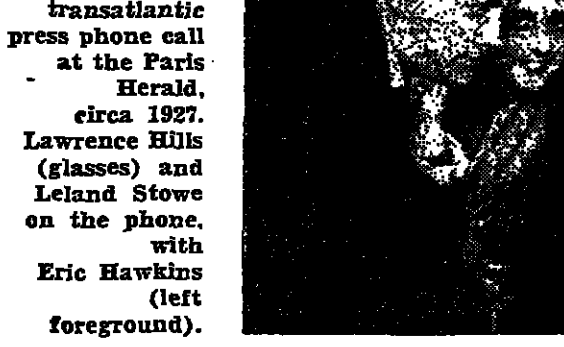

The respective characters of the two papers in those days may be suggested by two quotations I recall from that distant past. The first was certainly exaggerated, since it came from a man best noted for moderation. In one of the numerous postcards that device for maintaining a voluminous correspondence with minimum effort) with which Ezra Pound used to pepper me, he referred with scorn to "the dead-and-stuffed New York Herald." The other citation appeared in an article about The Paris Chicago Tribune, "The Daily Mirelle," contributed to the American Mercury of the H.L. Mencken days by Whit Burnett. He described the paper as "one day a work of genius and the next a ghastly mistake."

It was The Herald which won the final battle by buying The Tribune, so that on December 1, 1934, it became The Herald Tribune. Its parent paper in New York had assumed that name some years before, but the Paris edition could not do so because of the confusion that would have resulted from the simultaneous existence in Paris of two Tribunes. That such a confusion could have important practical consequences had already been demonstrated by an episode which has entered journalistic history but whose full story, so far as I know, has never been told.

This is it: It was during the Versailles peace conference, President Wilson (like the Pentagon today) did not feel it necessary to take the Senate into his confidence. The peace treaty was drafted; but the Senate, whose "advice and consent" the President was obliged to seek for its ratification, had no inkling of what might be in it. Elucidation at last came not from the executive branch of the government, but from the press. A representative of The Chicago Tribune was escorted into the Senate, where he handed to the speaker the text of the Versailles Treaty. I do not recall that The Chicago Tribune ever told how it got it, and with reason. Why should it have admitted that what looked like a triumph of journalistic ingenuity had been nothing but a stroke of luck?

It was a representative of one of the minor countries at Versailles (just-treated Czechoslovakia, I believe) who was responsible for the leak. The little nation felt that the Big Four were paying scant attention to the interests of the less powerful; and they felt their position might be improved if the public, particularly the American public, were informed about what was going on. Two American papers published editions in Paris. What would be easier than to give the treaty text to one of them, for confidential delivery to the home office? It was, naturally, the great metropolis of New York which seemed the best place to publish the revelation. The idea was to hand it to The New York Herald Tribune; but there was no Herald Tribune in Paris. So the bewildered small-nation representative walked into the office of The Chicago Tribune and handed the text to the wrong paper.

Old Photos

Among the unkind blows The Tribune delivered to The Herald, I member two in particular. One came when The Herald printed a picture of a crowd running from soldiers firing on it, with the headline: "BREAD RIOTS IN MOSCOW." The picture looked familiar to me. I dug into my books and found it, the frontispiece of Arno Dosch-Fleuro's "Through War to Revolution." It had been taken a decade earlier. The Tribune ran it the next day, repeating The Herald's description of it as a current happening, together with its correct identification, under the heading: "SCOOP OF THE CENTURY." For weeks thereafter, Eric Hawkins, my opposite number on The Herald, never ran into me without shaking his head dolefully and growling: "Not cricket, old boy, not cricket." I reminded him of it a few years ago, shortly before his death. A man without razor, he had forgiven and forgotten.

The Herald in this case had been the victim of a news agency which had decided to give the old pictures in its files a new lease on life by providing up-to-date captions for them. The paper had bought, and published the picture, assuming naturally that it was what it was represented to be. It was not quite as blameless in the second of the two episodes I remember, a case of carelessness.

On June 29, 1927, Comdr. Evelyn Byrd attempted to emulate Lindbergh by flying the Atlantic to Paris. As the evening wore on and there was no news of him, it became evident that he would only arrive, if at all, at press time. The Herald therefore took normal precautions. It prepared two alternative front pages, one with a banner headline reading: "NO NEWS OF BYRD, THE OTHER: BYRD LANDS IN PARIS. Either could be placed on the press at a few minutes' notice.

It was not too difficult to write in advance most of the story on the anticipated successful arrival. Reporters had already described the crowds waiting at Le Bourget, and interviewed the notables who were there. New York had cabled the details of the takeoff and of the preparations for the flight. The files yielded the biographies of Byrd and his three-man crew, as well as material for the inevitable comparison with the Lindbergh flight. All of this could be, and was, written and put into type. It was only necessary to leave room at the beginning for a lead reporting the arrival, when it occurred. But how much room?

The rewrite man entrusted with preparing the story might have left a certain amount of blank space, at a guess, but he chose to solve the problem differently. He described the arrival as if it had actually happened, assuming that this would automatically provide the correct amount of space for the real story. Since what he wrote was meant in any case to be replaced, he saw no reason for not giving full rein to his imagination; so he told how a Herald reporter was the first to reach the plane, what he had asked Byrd, and what Byrd had replied to him. It was a pure labor of love, since it was never destined to reach an audience, but as it happened, it did.

Press time arrived and Byrd had not. The word was given to start the presses; in the press room, the crew clamped on the wrong page and the presses started to roll. The bales of Herald for the Paris newstands left the building at about the same time that Byrd and his crew were wading ashore through the surf at Ver-sur-Mer, where their plane had come to grief.

The error was discovered and corrected before mail copies went out; but how about the newstands? Everybody even remotely connected with The Herald was on the streets of Paris when the kiosks opened, desperately buying up all copies. I heard of The Herald's blunder early in the day, but couldn't get my hands on a copy. However, The Continental Daily Mail got hold of one. The next morning, announcing, "The following story was printed yesterday by an American daily of Paris; it is reproduced: The Herald's erroneous article in emulation of its British cousin. The Tribune the next day noted: 'The following story was printed yesterday by The Continental Daily Mail,' and the end of its reprint of The Mail's reprint of The Herald added quietly: 'The American newspaper which printed this story was not The Chicago Tribune.'"

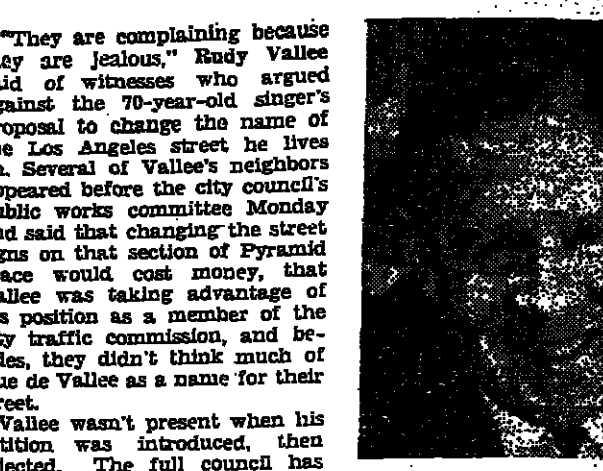

Obituary

On Jan. 10, 1928, I found myself with my guard down. The Herald had a chance to take revenge; but I was lucky. Thomas Hardy was dying. I had written a long obituary about him and had it set up so that it could be slipped into the paper quickly if he chose to die at press time. It was indeed just on the deadline that a cyclist delivered to me the proofs of Le Matin (a leading Paris daily) which died at the end of the war from galloping collaborationism) in which I found a short paragraph reporting the death of Hardy. I had barely time to write an introductory paragraph announcing his death, tear open the front page, and fill its first column with the Hardy obituary. I then went tranquilly home, with a comfortable feeling of duty fulfilled.

But when I entered the city room the next evening, I was met with a growl from the day editor: "Where'd you get the idea Thomas Hardy is dead?" "It's in Le Matin," I answered. He tossed the paper to me. "Find it," he challenged. I couldn't. It was clear what had happened: The Matin had composed an erroneous report, had discovered the error, and had cut it out; the arrangement we had with the French paper for an exchange of proofs did not require it to warn us in such circumstances.

I waited with some apprehension for the 8 p.m. opening of the London wire, which related to the nightly reports from The Chicago Tribune's various European offices, each item separated from the next by its number, denoting the start of a new subject. It began like this: "ONE WHY MUST YOU TRY COVER LONDON FROM PARIS QUERY WE ARE LAUGHING STOCK OF ENGLAND STOP THOMAS HARDY REPORTED BETTER TODAY TWO LONDON THOMAS HARDY DIED AT HIS SUSSEX HOME TONIGHT." I dug a photo out of the files and ran it with the caption, "Thomas Hardy, the illustrious English novelist whose death was reported exclusively yesterday by The Chicago Tribune." The Herald never noticed that I had killed him prematurely.

PEOPLE: Sponsor Defends Rue de Vallee

Rudy Vallee

"They are complaining because they are jealous," Rudy Vallee said of witnesses who argued against the 70-year-old singer's proposal to change the name of the Los Angeles street he lives on. Several of Vallee's neighbors appeared before the city council's public works committee Monday and said that changing the street signs on that section of Franklin Place would cost money, that Vallee was taking advantage of his position as a member of the city traffic commission, and besides, they didn't think much of Rue de Vallee as a name for their street.

Vallee wasn't present when his petition was introduced, then rejected. The full council has the final decision and Vallee said he was confident it would be in his favor. The city traffic engineer told the committee that celebrities had petitioned successfully in the past to have streets renamed for them. Councilman Robert Stevenson commented: "It's terribly unfortunate that this thing came over started in the first place."

BAR FACTS: In Detroit, a judge told William Stewart Rawls it wasn't worth the city's time and money to prosecute him then pulled $10 from his wallet to pay Rawls' fee. Rawls, 32, in Detroit since June 30, had tried to get money from Traveler's Aid Society and county welfare, said Recorder's Court Judge Thomas L. Poindeexter. Five days ago Rawls was charged with possession of dangerous drugs, some sleeping pills. In court Monday, Judge Poindeexter told Rawls he'll proceed against you if you don't get a lawyer, which would cost $300. It is in the best interest of the city to see that your case is dismissed and you're sent back to Cleveland.

On the rockville, Maryland, fleas and lice are bugging Montgomery County officials, sending up the wheels of justice. Flamingoes can't seem to squash the problem. "They have been here three or four times in the past couple of weeks," said Howard Smith, circuit court clerk. "I guess they're just not using the right spray." During one recent trial in the county courthouse, a jury foreman asked to speak to the judge during a break. The judge said that such communications should be by note. The judge read the note, smiled and said: "The jury informs me that we are a little lousy around here." "May it please Your Majesty, Your Royal Highness... pray silence for the bridegroom, his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales," said the man on the radio. Scores of listeners called the British Broadcasting Company Monday asking what it was all about. The calls stopped when an announcer explained that the prince, scheduled for a flight to New York, had been invited to the announcement he would be like to make. Meanwhile, Britain is waiting for Prince Charles, the Prince of Wales, to make a parachute jump, the first ever by an heir to the throne, as part of his Royal Air Force training. The jump from a tethered balloon, scheduled for next month, further means Princess Anne, hospitalized in ovarian cyst surgery, is making such rapid recovery that she reported planning her official autumn list of engagements. Buckingham Palace spokesman said yesterday.

Arthur Schlesinger Jr., Pulitzer-prize-winning historian and former special assistant to U.S. Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, has married Alexandra Komet Allen, the daughter of the late Mrs. Alston Boyd, better known as the painter Lily Cahill, and William T. Emmet of North Tarrytown, New York, as was disclosed Monday. They were married Friday at the New York apartment by Judge J. Edgar Sullivan. Both have been divorced once.

An advertising copy writer in New York is mulling in on one racket. In an ad for Walkabout, a New York clothing store, he has called the following for weather information: Asked why he became a teacher, a former special assistant to U.S. Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, said that he had been a New York apartment by Judge J. Edgar Sullivan. Both have been divorced once.

Both have been divorced once. Both have been divorced once. Both have been divorced once.
